Getting into stride - 1943-1949

In 1943, Cheddi Jagan was President of the Sawmill and Forest Workers Union from 1949-53. Here he is talking to some members. He wrote: “Before I became a politician in the strict sense of the word, I was a trade unionist.”

Cheddi Jagan at his dental surgery in 1965.

At the age of 29 he was the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 31 he was appointed to the Legislative Council. He became a Member of Parliament in 1949.

With his son Cheddi (Joey) who was born in October 1949.

Seven years in the USA

Cheddi Jagan lived in Washington, D.C. for four years and attended Howard University. He was a lecturer at Howard University.

Growing Up

Cheddi Jagan was born March 21, 1919 in Georgetown, British Guiana. His parents were farmers. His father, James Jagan, was a great sportsman, particularly at cricket, horse racing and betting. He was a tall, fair skinned, impressive looking man with a large moustache. Any leadership qualities I have, I acquired from my father.”

Dr. Jagan graduated dentistry in 1936 from 1933-1937. After he graduated, he attended a session at the University of London where he worked with Dr. S. M. Jaffery. He was responsible for ending the threat of the crown disease that existed in those days and which destroyed good teeth.

Growing Up

Janet Jagan’s mother was a short, quiet, refined and deeply religious woman, who took care of her family well. She had a great influence on her children, and was a great source of strength and help to her husband. She was a member of the Women’s Christian Association (WCA), and was an active member of various church groups.

Photo taken in 1993 of her baptismal in Antonio, Port Mourant.

Cheddi Jagan was a member of the People’s Progressive Party (PPP) in 1947. In 1948, he was elected to the Central Legislative Assembly. He became the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 29 he was the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 31 he was appointed to the Legislative Council. He became a Member of Parliament in 1949.

Cheddi Jagan at his Dental Surgery in 1965.

Cheddi Jagan at home in 1957. They could afford to keep several dogs and cats as a racing student helped her to be in a good dental operator.

In 1943, Cheddi Jagan was President of the Sawmill and Forest Workers Union. He wrote: “Before I became a politician in the strict sense of the word, I was a trade unionist.”

Cheddi Jagan with one of his Hawaiian-Japanese friends at Nagasaki Falls.

Seven years in the USA

Cheddi Jagan lived in Washington, D.C. for four years and attended Howard University. He was a lecturer at Howard University.

Growing Up

Cheddi Jagan was born March 21, 1919 in Georgetown, British Guiana. His parents were farmers. His father, James Jagan, was a great sportsman, particularly at cricket, horse racing and betting. He was a tall, fair skinned, impressive looking man with a large moustache. Any leadership qualities I have, I acquired from my father.”

Dr. Jagan graduated dentistry in 1936 from 1933-1937. After he graduated, he attended a session at the University of London where he worked with Dr. S. M. Jaffery. He was responsible for ending the threat of the crown disease that existed in those days and which destroyed good teeth.

Growing Up

Janet Jagan’s mother was a short, quiet, refined and deeply religious woman, who took care of her family well. She had a great influence on her children, and was a great source of strength and help to her husband. She was a member of the Women’s Christian Association (WCA), and was an active member of various church groups.

Photo taken in 1993 of her baptismal in Antonio, Port Mourant.

Cheddi Jagan was a member of the People’s Progressive Party (PPP) in 1947. In 1948, he was elected to the Central Legislative Assembly. He became the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 29 he was the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 31 he was appointed to the Legislative Council. He became a Member of Parliament in 1949.

Cheddi Jagan at home in 1957. They could afford to keep several dogs and cats as a racing student helped her to be in a good dental operator.

In 1943, Cheddi Jagan was President of the Sawmill and Forest Workers Union. He wrote: “Before I became a politician in the strict sense of the word, I was a trade unionist.”

Cheddi Jagan with one of his Hawaiian-Japanese friends at Nagasaki Falls.

Seven years in the USA

Cheddi Jagan lived in Washington, D.C. for four years and attended Howard University. He was a lecturer at Howard University.

Growing Up

Cheddi Jagan was born March 21, 1919 in Georgetown, British Guiana. His parents were farmers. His father, James Jagan, was a great sportsman, particularly at cricket, horse racing and betting. He was a tall, fair skinned, impressive looking man with a large moustache. Any leadership qualities I have, I acquired from my father.”

Dr. Jagan graduated dentistry in 1936 from 1933-1937. After he graduated, he attended a session at the University of London where he worked with Dr. S. M. Jaffery. He was responsible for ending the threat of the crown disease that existed in those days and which destroyed good teeth.

Growing Up

Janet Jagan’s mother was a short, quiet, refined and deeply religious woman, who took care of her family well. She had a great influence on her children, and was a great source of strength and help to her husband. She was a member of the Women’s Christian Association (WCA), and was an active member of various church groups.

Photo taken in 1993 of her baptismal in Antonio, Port Mourant.

Cheddi Jagan was a member of the People’s Progressive Party (PPP) in 1947. In 1948, he was elected to the Central Legislative Assembly. He became the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 29 he was the youngest member elected to the Legislative Assembly of British Guiana. At the age of 31 he was appointed to the Legislative Council. He became a Member of Parliament in 1949.

Cheddi Jagan at home in 1957. They could afford to keep several dogs and cats as a racing student helped her to be in a good dental operator.

In 1943, Cheddi Jagan was President of the Sawmill and Forest Workers Union. He wrote: “Before I became a politician in the strict sense of the word, I was a trade unionist.”

Cheddi Jagan with one of his Hawaiian-Japanese friends at Nagasaki Falls.