Following is the full text of an address by Dr Cheddi Jagan, President of the Republic of Guyana, to the General Text of an address by Dr Cheddi Jagan, President of the Republic of Guyana, to the General Assembly, UNESCO, in the wake of the 20th century. UNESCO has been invited to address the General Assembly of the United Nations on the topic of "Education and Cultural Affairs Cure of Strife and Development in the 21st Century."

Dr. Cheddi Jagan is the President of the Republic of Guyana, a country located in the north-eastern coast of South America. Guyana has been an independent nation since 1966, following a long history of British colonial rule. The country is known for its diverse culture, rich flora and fauna, and is celebrated for its unique cultural festivals such as the Annandale Waterfall Festival and the Guyanese Festival of Culture.

In this address, Dr. Jagan discusses the importance of education, cultural preservation, and sustainable development in the face of globalization and the challenges it poses. He emphasizes the need for a global community to work together towards the common goal of creating a world where peace, justice, and education are values that guide society. The address highlights the significance of UNESCO's role in promoting cultural diversity, education, and sustainable development worldwide.

The address was presented to the General Assembly of UNESCO on 16 November 1995. It is an important contribution to the discourse on education, cultural preservation, and sustainable development in the face of globalization.
