Dear Sir,

From time to time over the past few years, I have referred to the question of the so called 'neutral' policy of the Guiana Graphic. I think that I have had the occasion to challenge this to you and your Sunday Editor.

I would again like to refer to this matter and to say that if it is that the policy of your paper is supposed to be neutral, you need a careful re-examination of what you mean by neutrality. I have noted over the past weeks, as we get closer to the election campaign, a decided bias on the part of the Guiana Graphic. Your paper used to seek a balance, however frail, whenever it saw cause to attack the PPP, by also shooting out a half hearted attack on the Opposition. Even this you have now abandoned.

Of course, I cannot object if it is now finally decided that the Graphic will take a position, and that its position is anti-PPP. That is the right of the policy makers. But in case this is not so, please do not try to assure readers of your neutrality, for this is not the case.

Yours sincerely,

Janet Jagan
